And if the babies aren't swatting flies, he's retaining that weight to go to market with. That's all you've got to sell is weight of the cow." Mike Nesmith-Elk City, Oklahoma

A Warning to Livestock Owners Admire the Drought

by Haley Robertson

As many of us in the livestock business know, August comes with not only hot temperatures that don't seem to let up, but problems within our pastures/fields due to heat stress placed on plants and animals. From Johnsongrass to hay grazer, now is the time we see an uptick in cattle deaths due to Nitrate toxicity and Prussic Acid poisoning. Both can present as silent killers, leaving the farmer or rancher wondering what happened to their perfectly healthy stock.

Prussic acid and nitrate toxicity can lead to sudden death in cattle, often with little warning. Prussic acid, when ingested, interferes with the animal's ability to use oxygen at the cellular level, leading to respiratory failure. Symptoms can appear rapidly, including labored breathing, staggering, and eventually, collapse. Nitrate toxicity, on the other hand, converts hemoglobin in the blood to methemoglobin, which cannot carry oxygen, leading to a similar effect of oxygen deprivation. Symptoms of nitrate poisoning include rapid breathing, muscle tremors, weakness, and in severe cases, sudden death. It is good to note that cattle can process nitrates in their rumen, converting it into nitrites which is digestible, but once the rumen is overloaded, the aforementioned effects happen, being especially faster in younger cattle and lactating cows.

Prussic acid and nitrates are both naturally occurring compounds in many forage plants. They are particularly concentrated in plants like Johnson Grass and Hay Grazer under certain conditions. Prussic acid forms when plant cells are damaged, such as by frost, drought, or mechanical injury. The compound is stored in the plant's cells and is released when the cells are disrupted. Nitrate accumulation occurs when plants absorb more nitrogen from the soil than they can convert into proteins, typically due to stress conditions like drought, high temperatures, or fertilization with high nitrogen levels.

The risk of prussic acid toxicity is highest when the plant is young and rapidly growing, particularly right after a period of stress like frost or drought. As the plant matures, the concentration of prussic acid generally decreases. However, new growth following a stress event can be highly toxic. Nitrate levels are also highest during rapid growth, particularly after fertilization or during periods of stress.

If you suspect your forage is at risk for prussic acid poisoning or nitrate toxicity, be proactive and get your forage tested by your local Extension Office. While cutting and drying your forage allows the prussic acid to dissipate into the air, the nitrates stay in the stock of the plant and are more concentrated at the nodules of the plant, meaning the risk of nitrate toxicity stays. Your local Extension Office can test in house for both in Oklahoma, meaning you will get your results right away. If there are any further concerns, they can send it off to the OSU Soil Lab and you will get results within a few days. When in doubt, Test it out!

Shooting Suspect Has Charges Upgraded After Preliminary

August 12, 2024 - After a two-day preliminary hearing last week, a Carter man's charges were upgraded from first-degree manslaughter to first-degree murder with malice aforethought. The hearing aimed to determine if there was probable cause to charge 37-year-old Clayton Samson Hays with the shooting death of 42-year-old Colter Vaught, which occurred on the morning of January 11 outside a company located in the 900 block of S. Merritt Road. Hays had requested that all charges be dropped, citing self-defense.

The hearings included Hays's interrogation tape and 911 call, where he claimed not to know the identity of the victim. Testimonies during the hearing indicated that Hays knew Vaught through mutual acquaintances.

The judge ultimately denied the request to drop the charges, ruling that there was probable cause for the upgraded murder charge.

Hays is scheduled to return to Beckham County District Court on September 18 at 1:30 p.m.

Company, Executive and Employee Indicted for $100M Price-Fixing Conspiracy Involving

August 12, 2024 - A federal grand jury in Oklahoma City has indicted Sioux Erosion Control, Inc., its vice president BG Dale Biscoe, and another employee on charges of price-fixing and bid-rigging involving over $100 million in publicly-funded transportation construction contracts across Oklahoma.

Sioux Erosion Control operates out of Weatherford.

The indictment alleges that from September 2017 to April 2023, Sioux and its co-defendants colluded with competitors to inflate prices for erosion control products and services, including sod, and manipulated contract bids by submitting artificially high bids or avoiding bids altogether.

The Antitrust Division and other law enforcement agencies are prosecuting the case, emphasizing their commitment to maintaining fair competition in taxpayer-funded projects. The maximum penalties for the charges include up to 10 years in prison and $1 million in fines for individuals, and up to $100 million in fines for corporations. Previous related guilty pleas have been made by four individuals, including a former Sioux employee. The investigation is ongoing, and the public is encouraged to report any relevant information to the Procurement Collusion Strike Force.
