Fewer Cattle Enter Feedlots

The latest U.S. Department of Agriculture cattle-on-feed report offers another sign that feeder cattle supplies are tightening, an issue that matters to cattle producers throughout Western Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle. The numbers show how cattle are moving through the beef production system and what producers may face in the coming months.

Released October 23, the report showed 11.4 million cattle and calves were being held in U.S. feedlots with a capacity of 1,000 head or more on October 1. That was slightly below the same date last year.

The bigger change came in the number of cattle entering feedlots. September placements totaled 1.78 million head, down 12% from September 2025. This was the lowest September placement total since USDA's reporting series began in 1996. Marketings of fed cattle also declined 7% from a year earlier, totaling approximately 1.52 million head, the lowest September figure in the series.

Oklahoma State University livestock economist Dr. Derrell Peel discussed the report in an October 26 interview with Oklahoma Farm Report. He said placements had declined sharply for three consecutive months, showing that fewer feeder cattle were moving into feedlots. Fewer placements today could mean fewer finished cattle available for market in the months ahead.

Feedlot inventories have not fallen as quickly because cattle are staying on feed longer. This slows the turnover of animals through feedlots, helping maintain inventory levels even as fewer new cattle arrive. However, keeping cattle on feed longer cannot make up for shrinking supplies indefinitely.

For cattlemen across the Southern Plains, these numbers matter because cow-calf producers, stocker operators, feedlots and meat processors all depend on cattle moving through the production chain. When fewer feeder cattle are available, feedlots may face greater competition when purchasing animals. Producers must also weigh cattle prices against feed costs, grazing expenses and the potential return when animals are sold.

Peel noted that drought concerns continue to affect producers' decisions about retaining heifers. Keeping heifers for breeding can help rebuild the nation's cow herd, but it takes time before those animals produce calves that eventually enter the beef supply. Recent rainfall could improve wheat pasture and grazing prospects in parts of the region, although adequate moisture and forage growth will determine how much winter grazing is available.

The report does not guarantee higher cattle prices. Consumer demand, processing capacity, imports and production costs also influence the market. However, continued declines in placements reinforce the importance of watching cattle supplies as the industry moves into the coming months.

For producers in Western Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle, the latest figures offer another reason to watch feedlot inventories, feeder cattle availability and local grazing conditions. With fewer cattle entering feedlots, tight supplies could continue to affect the beef industry.

A businesses has to balance building its brand for long-term growth with creating revenue for short-term operations.

How do you do this?

Les Binet and Peter Field are marketers, research analysts, and efficiency experts who've studied and written extensively on advertising that works. Their book The Long and the Short of It explores ad content and general approach to potential customers.

As for content, they concluded that the more ads lean on emotion, the better they work. These emotion-based ads build attachment with the public. That's branding. Businesses that focus on this type of advertising, they say, make more sales at higher profitability over the long-term.

They also acknowledge that businesses need to occasionally juice sales. Binet and Field recommend a 60/40 split: 60 percent of ads should be big picture efforts at creating a stronger bond with the public, while 40 percent of a company's ads should aim at sales activation.

"Campaigns need to strike the right balance between long-term investment inbrand-building using mass media, and short-term, direct methods that stimulate sales. Campaigns that use both in harmony are more effective, more efficient and more profitable. Long-term (3+ years) investment in advertising delivers double the profit of a short-term approach (less than 1year), but investing in both delivers even higher returns. At least 60% should be invested in these brand-building media with the remainder spent on shorter-term activation channels to provide a response mechanism to capitalise onthe effects of the brand-building activity." [1]

The majority of messages should build the brand by bonding with the public, with the rest of the messages capitalizing on that brand equity with short-term offers. The Long...Of It is big picture branding that seeks to bond people with a company. The Short Of It is occasional ads for limited time sales activation.

But understand that short-term, "Buy Now" ads don't help a business long-term. Mass marketing to new and existing customers does that.

"Tight audience targeting, whilst desirable for activation, does not help long-term success. Campaigns which reach a mass audience of existing & new customers are more efficient. Brands which target the whole market achieve 3 times as many large business effects than those that focus on existing customers (effects include increased profit, sales, or market share, and a reduction in price sensitivity). Attempting to build deep, loyal relationships with existing customers is less effective than investing in advertising that reaches as wide an audience as possible. Ad campaigns which target new customers report 60% more large sales effects in the first six months alone." [1]

The majority of a company's ads should win hearts and bond with the audience. Then, occasional sales activation ads can successfully encourage immediate purchases. This is the formula that Binet and Field say leads to greater growth and profitability over time.

Weatherford Recycling Event Set for November 14

October 23, 2026 - Weatherford, OK – The Weatherford Environment Group will host a special recycling event Saturday, November 14, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in recognition of America Recycles Day.

The event will take place at the Weatherford Recycling Center's Materials Processing and Education Center, located at 602 E. Clark Street, at the corner of Illinois and Clark streets, two blocks south of Main Street.

Residents are encouraged to bring a variety of recyclable materials, including large metal items, appliances, non-working electronics, light bulbs, batteries and phone books. A Shred-It truck will be on site to securely destroy personal documents for a $5 donation.

A drug take-back event, coordinated by SWODA, will also be available. Accepted medications include pills, tablets, capsules, patches and liquids in containers. Nuclear medications, aerosols, auto-injectors and syringes will not be accepted.

Other items accepted during the special event include fluorescent, LED and incandescent light bulbs, lead-acid batteries commonly found in vehicles and equipment, and household batteries of various sizes.

Organizers note that televisions and computer monitors will not be accepted. Residents with working electronic devices are encouraged to donate them to the Et Cetera Shop.

The recycling center features a sheltered drive-through area, allowing participants to enter from the west end of the facility and exit on the east side.

In addition to the special event, the Weatherford Recycling Center maintains year-round drop-off bins for cardboard, aluminum cans, No. 1 and No. 2 plastics, steel and tin cans, newspapers, magazines, office paper and other mixed paper products. Styrofoam is not accepted.

The Weatherford Environment Group is a volunteer organization dedicated to keeping the community clean, green and beautiful. The event is organized by local volunteers with assistance from the City of Weatherford.

For more information about the recycling event or to schedule an educational recycling program for an organization or business, contact Faye Henson at (580) 772-5984.

Spanish Concrete Manufacturer Opens First U.S. Plant in Elk City

October 23, 2026 - Elk City, OK – A Spanish concrete manufacturing company with 140 years of history has opened its first U.S. production facility in Elk City, bringing new jobs and economic development opportunities to western Oklahoma.

Escofet, an urban design company owned by international building materials group Molins, officially celebrated the opening of its new facility with a ribbon-cutting ceremony during the week of October 19.

The 32,000-square-foot manufacturing plant produces concrete products used in public spaces, including benches, tables, building facades and other urban landscaping materials. Products manufactured in Elk City will be shipped to projects throughout the United States.

The facility currently employs six people, with plans to expand its workforce to between 40 and 60 employees. Company officials anticipate adding approximately 50 jobs in the coming months as production increases.

Jorge Tomás Cortés, head of Escofet US, oversees operations at the Elk City facility. Jennifer Cain, an Elk City native, serves as office manager and co-founder of Escofet US.

Company executives spent approximately two years evaluating potential locations before selecting Elk City for the company's first American manufacturing operation.

Several factors contributed to the decision, including access to raw materials such as cement and aggregates, convenient interstate transportation and Elk City's central location for distributing products nationwide. The availability of a local workforce and the community's values also played a role.

The expansion comes as Escofet celebrates its 140th anniversary and responds to increasing demand for its products in the United States.

Establishing a domestic manufacturing facility will allow the company to shorten delivery times for American customers while reducing the need to ship finished concrete products from overseas.

Production is already underway at the Elk City plant, with additional hiring and manufacturing growth planned as the company expands its U.S. operations.

The new facility positions Elk City as a manufacturing and distribution center for concrete products destined for public spaces and development projects across the country.
